Dear Stan

I am in the throes of completing a book on Robert Sobukwe and wonder whether I can get you to dig into your memory ...

I am trying to pin down his state of mind in the immediate aftermath of Sharpeville in March 1960, and have had varying reports - that he was either very cheerful because of the strength of the campaign, or that he was severely depressed because of the shooting.

I have read your article in Drum in 1972 and wonder whether you have any further details: Did you see him at Marshall Square or The Fort, and in what circumstances? And how can you remember details of your conversation? Did any article by you appear at the time, and if so, is a copy perhaps available?

I am also having some trouble getting clear whether he and the others spent the night of Monday March 21 at Marshall Square, or at The Fort.

Didn't you also go to Kimberley when he was banished there in 1969? Or is my memory playing me tricks? If you did go, I would be delighted to get details from you about his reactions.

Any light you can throw on any of this would be much appreciated.

With all good wishes

Sincerely

BENJAMIN POBRUND
